

EMBER WHO SHARED HIS FIRE

A dragon tale about warmth and kindness.

EMBER: If I share
I'll have none.

That's math for scaredy-dragons.

MIRA: You look like a chili pepper with wings.

EMBER: I am hot
and slightly frozen.

PUFF:

Ten out of ten for manners.
Zero for scary.

MIRA: Just one spark?
We'll guard it together.

Fear makes small flames feel like the last cookie.

Traitor smoke!

Helper smoke.
Upgrade.

MIRA: Warmth likes company.
EMBER: It got brighter?

Shared fire multiplies.
Kept fire only worries.

A whimsical illustration of a young boy with brown hair and a red shirt, kneeling on a blue rug next to a green dinosaur. Both are holding sticks with marshmallows over a warm fireplace. A man's head floats in the air above them. In the background, a dog sits on a bench near a window with white curtains, and a purple teddy bear is visible. The scene is cozy and lit by the fire and moonlight.

Ow delicious ow.

Best heater!

EMBER:

I thought giving meant losing.

MIRA:

Giving meant belonging.

Coldest nights need bravest sharers.

Keep courage
like a flame — pass it on and it won't go out.

Hoarding makes you small.

Warming others makes you mighty.

THE END.

Share your gifts.
Warmth grows when it travels.
