

THE SECRET SLEEP KEEPS

A bedtime adventure about rest and brave tomorrows.

Digi World

Sleeping is boring!
Milo sighs at the sky.
Why close my eyes
when the night's flying by?

A soft wind whirls.
The curtains all lean.
Scout's little tail starts a happy machine!

PIP: Spark!
You sneezed on my braid!

SPARK:
Sorry! Moon
pepper.

A shimmering keyhole floats near the light—
not scary, just soft,
like a hush in the night.
— a secret I keep.

They tip-toe through silver, through soft leafy lanes,
where fireflies practice their tiny refrains.

LUMA: I lost my glow...
rushing too fast through the night.

MILO: We can help!

They raced. They grabbed. They chuckleid and fell.
They caught zero glow-beams (but caught Spark as well!)

So they sit.
They breathe.
They wait with the moth.
No chasing.
No rushing.
Just kindness.

LUMA: Thank you. Rest helped me remember my shine.

MILO: Rest... helped?

LUMA: Brave tomorrows need night to climb.

Sleep isn't boring, the garden winds sing.
It's how little hearts practice tomorrow's brave wing.
You grow while you dream.
You heal while you rest.

PIP: He's sleeping... while floating?

MILO: That's advanced, I think.

They wave to the garden.
The keyhole grows small.
Back under the covers, still cozy and tall.

PIP: Tomorrow feels bigger already.
MILO: Because we rested for it.

Rest is not quitting.
Rest is getting ready.
Brave days grow
from quiet nights.

Goodnight, little dreamers.
Your tomorrow is already growing.
